Not illustrated. 1847 Excerpt: . . . giving us six days of labour in which to do all we have to do for these perishing bodies Is the Lords day strictly rendered unto Him in abstraction of mind and body from worldly gain and worldly business, and devoted to the preparation of the soul for heavenly rest Is all business that can be done before or after Sunday jealously avoided on that day, from the pure motive of yielding to God our Creator, Redeemer, and Sanctifier, the service of that day which he is pleased to call his own Those who are most punctual in paying their dues to their earthly governors, will generally be found most conscientious in the observance of the Lords day; and for this reason, that the same principle which urges obedience to God enforces obedience to man for Gods sake. (9). Prov. xxvii. 1. Boast not thyself ofto-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. The warning in the text is applicable alike to the young, the old, and the middle aged. It reminds the young that though health and strength be their present portion, yet younger than they have been carried to the grave through disease or accident, to which their very vigour and activity are especially exposed. Let them consider that life itself is but a vapour which appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. Can middle-age with its long experience require to be warned against forming plans and schemes without...
