Photographs and casts of the condition before and after treatment were shown as well as the exhibition of the patient. The third patient presented was a little girl, who, when she came under Dr. Abbe s observation, had a tumor which occupied the entire parotid region extending beneath the jaw, upward to the zygoma and forward on the cheek. It was regarded as an angiosarcoma. An attempt was made to excise it, but this had to be abandoned on account of its extent, vascularity and nerve involvement. Application of strong radium in a glass tube was thereupon made. At one time the tube was pushed into the center of the cavernous angioma and left over night. This produced great reaction, high fever and tenderness in...
