Original publisher: Washington, DC (555 New Jersey Ave. , NW, Washington 20208-5574) : The Center, 1996. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)40107319 Subject: Educational statistics -- Congresses. Excerpt: . . . Strengthen the Centers methodological and technical capacity through more systematic use of outside expertise in the Advisory Council of Education Statistics, as well as ad hoc advisory groups; Develop, publish, disseminate, and implement standards to guide all phases of the Centers work, including establishing an office of statistical standards headed by a chief statistician; In collaboration with the states, assess and improve the quality, consistency, and reliability of data obtained from state and local agencies, from institutions of higher education, and from other sources; and Institute a publications policy that clearly distinguishes between different types of reports - for example, statistical summaries and digests, analytic reports, descriptive reports, and reports on methodology - and develop a schedule of fixed release dates for selected key education statistics. Ten years later, with the direction provided by the Panel, strong leadership at NCES, and support from hereas 10 years ago, the Congress and the larger education community, W future of NCES depended NCES is much stronger and has become a widely on rectifying fundamental respected statistical agency. The agency has signif-weaknesses, today the icantly strengthened its core functions; operates agency's future can build on a strong foundation. under well-defined guiding principles and high standards for data collection, analysis, and report-ing; and has established a clear program of work for reporting on the major aspects of education in the United States and other nations. Whereas 10 years ago, the future of NCES depended on rectifying fun-damental weaknesses, today the agency's future can build on a strong founda-tion.
